

Tom BALLANTYNE

As Chief Correspondent of the Hong Kong-published Orient Aviation magazine, Tom has more than 35 years experience in international journalism. Tom was a war correspondent for South Africa's Argus newspaper group before his 18-year stint with the Sydney Morning Herald as Chief of Staff. After three years Tom was appointed Travel and Aviation Editor in 1989. He left the Herald in 1994, working as Asia Correspondent for the London-based Airline Business magazine before being appointed Chief Correspondent of Orient Aviation. Still based in Sydney, Australia, he won the GE Aircraft Engines Award for the Best Air Transport Submission at the Royal Aerospace Society's Journalist of the Year Awards in London in 1998. In 2000 he was named the country's Aviation Writer of the Year as well as author of the Best Aviation Feature Story of the Year. He won the latter award again in 2004 for a series of articles on Asia's budget airline boom.
