

Celine Canu is Head of Facilitation for the International Air Transport Association in Montreal. In this role she is responsible for leading and coordinating IATA strategy and activities on aviation facilitation including border control, passenger data and identity management. She leads the IATA facilitation working group, a key forum where airlines, airports and governments representatives work together in shaping joined positions.

Celine has over 15 years' experience in aviation security and facilitation. In her role she promoted the development and the delivery of IATA policies, positions and strategies including those for risk-based security measures and security information sharing. She is now supporting the development of lifecycle transformation concepts related to passenger identity management including 'ONE ID', the development of biometric based solutions and digital ID.