

Michelle Dy
Legal Counsel
AirAsia

Michelle Dy is the legal counsel for the global affairs and sustainability department of AirAsia. She received her Juris Doctor with Latin honors from the University of Philippines College of Law. She also has two Master of Laws degrees, one from New York University as a David Marshall scholar and another one from the National University of Singapore, specializing in Corporate and Financial Services Law. She has extensive experience in the academia, public, and private sector having worked as a research associate in the Centre for Banking and Finance Law, NUS, a legal consultant for various departments in the Philippine government, and a junior associate for two top-tier law firms in the Philippines. She has co-written papers on aviation law dealing with issues of ownership and control in the Asian region published in the Hong Kong Law Journal and Air & Space Law. She has also written several papers on ASEAN financial integration including two book chapters on ASEAN financial services and capital market integration which will be published by Singapore Academy of Law and Cambridge University Press, respectively. She is qualified to practice law in the Philippines and awaiting admission to the New York Bar.